Taking Care of Yourself and Your Family

- Take care of your safety. Find a safe place to stay. Seek medical attention if needed.
- Eat a healthy, balanced diet and drink plenty of water. Avoid smoking, alcohol, caffeine and drugs.
- Try to get enough sleep and downtime every day.
- Stay connected with family and friends. Seek out support, connect with our faith community and other advisors.
- Be patient with yourself and those around you.
- Set priorities and tackle tasks in small steps.
- Use body movement to help get rid of the buildup of extra stress hormones.
- Take deep breaths to move stress out of your body and help you remain calm.
- Use known coping skills that have helped you get through difficult times in the past.
- If you continue to be very upset, talk with your primary care physician or a mental health professional.

Disasters and traumatic events can bring about significant stress. If you were involved in a disaster, you may be affected personally, regardless of whether you were hurt or lost a loved one. This is especially true if you have experienced a previous disaster or traumatic event.

It is important to monitor your physical and emotional health. It’s also helpful to know the typical reactions to stressful events and how to take care of your emotional health.
