

My Journey in Emotional and Behavioral Health

My great great great grandparent fled the scene/escaped from the concentration camps. They lived in Amsterdam. After, they escaped to a boat to China, raised enough money to return to another boat, came to America New York, rented a wagon, and came to San Francisco. In San Francisco opened a tailor, sewing, hemming store but different customs people coming to America couldn't say Lubarski so we shorten it to Lubin. I am Jewish. It would be good for people to understand Jewish people because then they could help out if there's a crisis. When people don't understand me it makes me upset and angry like I want to throw stuff and kick things.

- Andrew

This project was supported by San Mateo County Behavioral Health and Recovery Services and Office of Diversity and Equity. Funded by the Mental Health Services Act (Prop 63).

My Journey in Emotional and Behavioral Health

I have a positive attitude. I don't have a positive attitude when I'm stressed. I get stressed about my grades and other stuff. Doing my make-up gives me a positive attitude. I like make-up because I like to wear it because it makes me feel happy. Kylie make-up is my favorite line of make-up. I look up to the Kardashians.

- Christina

This project was supported by San Mateo County Behavioral Health and Recovery Services and Office of Diversity and Equity. Funded by the Mental Health Services Act (Prop 63).

My Journey in Emotional and Behavioral Health

A long time ago when the balance was lost a time when darkness nearly devoured the good but I'm getting ahead of myself. Once upon a time there was a young boy who thought nothing wrong would happen to him or so he thought. Then by lunch he didn't really get along with his peers, so they thought, but little did they know he deep down really cared about his peers he just didn't want to get hurt by anyone. Then the people began to stand in his way so they thought to send him away. Little did they know he was on to their plan all along so he decided to take a stand and fight back. He wasn't about to give up all he loved and cared about, though he didn't show it, so when they tried to send him away he cursed them with all the strength in his heart. Little to them they didn't head his warning until it was too late for him to look back on his path that he decided to walk down, a path of dark, and chose to seek revenge on those that did him wrong until someone pulled him from the dark...to be continued...

- Jimmie

This project was supported by San Mateo County Behavioral Health and Recovery Services and Office of Diversity and Equity. Funded by the Mental Health Services Act (Prop 63).

My Journey in Emotional and Behavioral Health

I would like to visit more places that make me happy. I took a photo of Alcatraz. The photo I took is beautiful because the weather is sunny. The culture is that it was about history. The tour is fun. I like to be in places that are relaxing.

- Joseph

This project was supported by San Mateo County Behavioral Health and Recovery Services and Office of Diversity and Equity. Funded by the Mental Health Services Act (Prop 63).

My Journey in Emotional and Behavioral Health

The girl's head is down, representing her thoughts racing with worry and even fear. She and the train conductor are the only ones on this train. The train seems to be going nowhere, the outside being at midnight, which represents solitude. The town has some outdoor lights, yet not many people live here. It looks like a city downtown in some way. She might have anxiety, usually needing reassurance from her friends and needing to vent to them. And yet, she fears that her friends will think badly of her for everything she considers small. She is emotionally fragile, too emotionally fragile for a human. She cares a bit too much, she would say. She enjoys the solitude of the train – no one else to bother her, make fun of her, touch her, or anything else she also fears. The conductor is unseen in this drawing, as it focuses on the girl.

- Paige

This project was supported by San Mateo County Behavioral Health and Recovery Services and Office of Diversity and Equity. Funded by the Mental Health Services Act (Prop 63).

